VOL. XIX. MAPLETON DEPOT, PA., WEDNESDAY, MAY 8, 1907. NO. 8

The Campaign Pledges Being Carried Out.

Reforms Promised Last Fall Brought About by Present Legislature.

Mileage Act Latest.

Before Governor Stewart's pen was dry from signing the McKean-Potter-Tioga district man's bill the railroads north of Williamsport were taking out the proper amount of mileage. The railroads are required to report their actual distances or pay a heavy fine. Falsified reports will meet with hard luck. One distance which was always 79 miles will hereafter be 74 miles,—this by way of example.

Nearly every paper contains headlines of reform acts recently signed by Governor Stewart. And under the rule of the same gang that placed these officers in power are all the greivances of the people being heard.

The monopolies that forced competition to the wall are being broken down and independent concerns are allowed some chance. The trolley freight bill will allow the unlimited resources of Central Penna. to be developed and a hundred other ways can be suggested whereby the common people wil be benefited. In lependent coal and glass operators can act now and give to the smaller manufacturer his own rights.

Tristate Averages in North American

You are interested in the Tristate League. Next to knowing the scores of the games, you want a chance to find out how the men are hitting and fielding the analysis that explains the victories and defeats.

The Philadelphia North Anmercan carries the complete batting and fielding averages on its Tristate page every Sunday, here averages are prepared especially for the The North American, and it is the only paper which has this feature. You can keep track of your favorites, and setle many an argument by having these figures close at hand, from week to week

Their accuracy was established last year by the closeness with which the final compilation paralleled the official figures issued by President Carpenter one month after The North American' printed its final figures for the season.

Further Particulars on the Death of Amon W. Swope.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Stillwater (Oklahoma) Weekly Gazette, of April 26, in which a column is devoted to the obituary of the late Amon W. Swope. Also shown on the first page is a two column cut of the deceased. Mr. Swope, a "Pioneer Citizen of Payne County" is spoken of as one of the representative men of the state. It is stated that on Friday afternoon he drove seven miles to a farm occupied by his son George. After starting home he got out of the carriage not far from the farm. Here he was found dead at 3:30 by Frank White.

The funeral was attended by his fellow Knight Templars in uniform. In such grateful memory is he held that the flowers at the funeral covered the casket, the alter and half the pulpit.

He was one of the enthusiastic promoters of the Oklahoma State college and was the first mayor of Stillwater.

LOCAL NEWS.

Brief Items of Happenings In and About the Town.

Court next week.

H. O. Andrews, who is engaged extensively in the lumber business about Mapleton, unloaded a new four-horse wagon at this place last week.

The night shifting engine at this place was disabled about 7 o'clock Saturday evening and was obliged to lay idle until help was received from the car shops at Huntingdon.

A car was bumped onto a trestle at Riddlesburg last Thursday on which about 15 Italians were working. Four of the men were instantly killed and three seriously injured.

An unknown Italian was struck by a freight train near Mill Creek last Thursday evening. He was knocked unconscious and taken to the Altoona hospital, where at last report he was unconscious.

A crowd of thirteen young people from Huntingdon were met at Mapleton on Saturday morning by another crowd of Mapleton people and proceeded to scale Jack's Mountain, their objective point being Jack's Spring. The party returned home on the afternoon train much delighted with their trip.

The Pennsylvania Railroad system, it is stated, will use in the neighborhood of 5,500,000 new wooden crossties this year, the total cost being estimated at $4,000-000. Engineers announce that despite the advanced prices of wooden cross-ties some of the roads are unable to make necessary improvements to the roadbed. In the vicinity of Altoona a tract of 14,000 acres is availadle for the planting and preservation of trees and the company is making arrangements to treat soft wood ties with creosote, so as to doudle the length of their lives.

While underneath a steel car tightening a bolt, Saturday, John Long, aged 28 years, employed in the East Hollidaysburg railroad yards, was struck on the head by a break lever, sustaining a crush of the skull. His death resulted instantly. The unfortunate young man was under the end of the car when the air went on from some unknown cause and the break lever struck his head, pinning it against the side of the bumper, crushing in his temple and the back part of his head. The deceased was a native of Bedford county where his parents reside.

Postoffice department officials are looking forward with interest to the putting into effect of the law permitting the transmission of letters and packages for special delivery where the special 10 cents postage is attached, in addition to the ordinary postage. The law will become effective July 1st next and is intended to do away with the usual special delivery stamp. It is believed at the department that a considerable increase in business will result from the system of special delivery and that the public will appreciate the saving of trouble in not being required to purchase the familiar blue stamp so long in use.

The Mapleton Band to become a Corporate Body.

Realizing that in order to act powerfully, intelligently and legally, any body organized must be governed by certain fixed rules, the Mapleton Band has taken steps to be incorporated according to the laws of Pennsylvania and with the consent of the Court of Common Pleas of Huntingdon County. The matter has already been left in the hands of an able attorney who will make the petition to the said court at its May session.

The corporate name will be "The Mapleton Band", the purpose of organization is for the purpose of rehearsing and playing music and giving concerts. The work of buying a lot and building a town hall will be be pushed rapidly as soon as the charter is secured.

Growing Interests in The Sunday School.

State Sabbath School Association Showing Interests in the Local Schools.

County Convention Meets Here.

The object of organized Sunday School work is to increase the efficiency of the work of the Sunday Schools by recommending the introduction of improved methods, and the insuguration of forward movements in the individual scholar wherever practicable.

All the leading denominations are falling in line supporting the State Association in every way possible.

The County Associations, as auxiliaries to the State Association, are in nearly all instances, vigorously pushing the work along. Huntingdon County though some what in the rear, is rapidly coming to the front, since the past year was one of the best in its history. The interest is growing and we are aiming at larger things in Sunday School work.

During the past three years the State Association has put nearly Three Hundred Dollars into this county to help in its work.

In order to conserve the work, Prof. William Beery, of Juniata College, well known as a Sunday School worker in this county as well as into this county as well as in the state, has been employed as a field worker in the county.

His work will be to show to the schools of the county, the relation they sustain to this organized work; to try and interest them to the extent that they will place themselves in touch with the movement, give to it their hearty cooperation, and thus reap the benefits and inspiration which comes from being linked with a world wide movement.

The County Association, regarded as an auxiliary of the State Association, is expected to furnish statistics, and render moral and financial support. The County Association looks to the individual schools to come to its aid in a similar way. Hence these three things are asked of each school in the county.

1. That each school send to the County Secretary, Mr. George Laity, Huntingdon, Pa., the annual statistical report.

2. That along with the report, a contribution is sent to the County Treasure, Mr. Theodore Jackson, Huntingdon, Pa., for county and state work.

3. That each school be represented at the County Convention.

Special emphasis is laid on three forward movements; The Cradle Roll, The Home Department, And Teachers Training Classes. These are considered of Vital importance, since where these three are in successful operation, all the people from infant to the octogenarian, including the shut ins and the shut-outs. as well as the indifferent, are reached; and the workers are adequately equipped for their responsible duties.

Can we look for your cooperation as a Sunday School worker to help the County Association in its work?

(Signed)
U. B. Brubaker, Pres.
George Laity, Rec. Sec.

R. F. D. Carriers Delighted.

A schedule for the increase of pay of the rural carriers in the postal service, approved by Postmaster General Meyer, has been announced to become effective July 1 next. The increase was authorized by the last Congress, which increased the appropriation for this branch of the postal service about $6,000,000 in order to allow the increase in salary of the 37,000 men and woman employed on the work.

The schedule adopted makes a graded increase in the compensation of carriers of from 9 to 25 per cent., based upon to number of miles traversed by the carriers as shown by the records of the department. It is as follows:

Routes.	Per Annum.
24 or more miles	$900
22 to 24 miles	864
20 to 22 miles	810
18 to 20 miles	720
16 to 18 miles	630
14 to 16 miles	540
12 to 14 miles	503
10 to 12 miles	468
8 to 10 miles	432
6 to 8 miles	396

The total cost of rural carrier service for the coming fiscal year will be about $35,000,000.

TEN YEARS OF PAIN.

Unable to Do Even Housework Because of Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. Margaret Emmerich, of Clinton St., Napoleon, O., says: "For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from kidney troubles. My back pained me terribly. Every turn or move caused sharp, shooting pains. My eyesight was poor, dark spots appeared before me, and I had dizzy spells. For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me quick relief, and finally cured me. They saved my life."

What Balzac Said of Women.

The man who can govern a woman can govern a nation.

A man who can love deeply is never utterly contemptible.

A woman full of faith in the one she loves is but a novelist's fancy.

Women are constantly the dupes, or else the victims, of their extreme sensitiveness.

In the elevated order of ideas, the life of man is glory, the life of woman is love.

Marriage has its unknown great men, as war has its Napoleons and philosophy its Descartes.

A man must be a fool who does not succeed in making a woman believe that which flatters her.

Marriage should combat without respite or mercy that monster which devours everything—habit.

The mistakes of a woman result almost always from her faith in the good and her confidence in the truth.

No man has yet discovered the means of successfully giving friendly advice to women—not even to his own.

The Indian axiom, "Do not strike even with a flower a woman guilty of a hundred crimes," is my rule of conduct.

When a woman pronounces the name of a man but twice a day, there may be some doubt as to the nature of her sentiment—but three times!

There is one thing admirable in women—they never reason about their blameworthy actions; even in their dissimulation there is an element of sincerity.—Houston Post.

MORE BOXES OF GOLD And Many Greenbacks.

325 boxes of Gold and Greenbacks will be sent to persons who write the most interesting and truthful letters of experience on the following topics:

1. How have you been affected by coffee drinking and by changing from coffee to Postum?

2. Give name and account of one or more coffee drinkers who have been hurt by it and have been induced to quit and use Postum.

3. Do you know any one who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?

4. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make it clear, black and with a snappy, rich taste?

5. Have you ever found a better way to make it than to use four heaping teaspoonfuls to the pint of water, let stand on stove until real boiling begins, and beginning at that time when actual boiling starts, boil full 15 minutes more to extract the flavor and food value. (A piece of butter the size of a pea will prevent boiling over). This contest is confined to those who have used Postum prior to the date of this advertisement.

Be honest and truthful, don't write poetry or fanciful letters, just plain, truthful statements.

Contest will close June 1st, 1907, and no letters received after that date will be admitted. Examinations of letters will be made by three judges, not members of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd. Their decisions will be fair and final, and a neat little box containing a $10 gold piece sent to each of the five writers of the most interesting letters, a box containing a $5 gold piece to each of the 20 next best, a $2 greenback to each of the 100 next best, and a $1 greenback to each of the 200 next best, making cash prizes distributed to 325 persons.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write, and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends and see how many among you can win prizes. It is a good, honest competition and in the best kind of a cause, and costs the competitors absolutely nothing.

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

AGAINST THE RULES.

—By Robert Isbell, in the Washington Post.

THE WHOLE STATE OF MISSOURI PLEADS WITH ROOSEVELT FOR CONVICT'S FREEDOM

A Jean Valjean in Real Life Has Aroused the Sympathy of High and Low.

Washington, D. C. — President Roosevelt in a note to the Department of Justice expressed the opinion that John William January, of Missouri, should have his sentence commuted at once or be pardoned outright. He wrote as follows:

"Department of Justice:

"In view of the statements of the judges, bank presidents and so forth, who know him, I think Anderson's nine years of life as an honest citizen, hard working and of good repute, warrant us in commuting his sentence at once or in pardoning him outright.

"Which do you think ought to be done? Are there sufficient reasons for not doing either?

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

The whole State of Missouri has risen up in appeal to President Roosevelt for a pardon for this Western Jean Valjean, who has just been recaptured in Kansas City after an upright and prosperous life of nine years, during which he had proved himself one of the best citizens of the place. Missouri is asking the President to give the man a "square deal," and there does not seem to be much doubt that Missouri's request will be granted.

John William January, thirteen or fourteen years ago, when he was just twenty-one years old, broke into the postoffice at Hennessey, Okla., for the purpose of robbery. He got no booty worth anything, but was caught, tried in the Federal Court at Guthrie, and sentenced to serve five years in the penitentiary.

In prison January was a model of good behavior. He was working for the good conduct commutation, and had come to within eight months of the time when he would be liberated, when he saw a chance to escape and took it. He worked his way north, and after a time got work on a railroad with a construction gang. He saved his money, and finally had enough to get to Kansas City. There, under the name of Charles W. Anderson, he got a job on a street railway. He was steady and sober, worked hard and saved his money. Kansas City is a red-hot city politically, and the fact that he never could be induced to vote, even on questions in which the street railroad men were deeply interested, caused some to marvel, but Anderson, aware of his civil disability through his prison sentence, held steadfastly aloof.

At length he saved enough money to buy out a small restaurant near the car barns of the street railroad. His principal customers were his former workmates. He stuck to his restaurant as he had to his railroad work, and as before he prospered. He had lived so long undetected that he began to believe he was safe, so he married and had one child, a five-year-old girl.

He made enough money to buy a better business in a more thriving locality. He sold his first place for a good price, and was looking for a new one when he was caught. It happened that a man who had been in the penitentiary at Leavenworth with him met him on the street and recognized him. The ex-convict followed Anderson and made himself known. Anderson realized at once that he was in the man's hands, and lost if he chose to betray him. The man proposed that they go "downtown and have some fun."

"No," answered Anderson. "I have quit all that. I am married and have a family. I don't want to have anything to do with you."

The convict knew there was a standing reward of $60 for information that would lead to the recapture of escaped prisoners. He got in communication with the prison authorities, and promised, if the money was forthcoming, to reveal the whereabouts of January.

The authorities promised, and the information was given them, with the result that the police of Kansas City were requested to arrest Anderson. Two policemen, hating their task, took the man they knew to have been a good citizen for nine years, and locked him up. Then it developed that the convict who had betrayed him could not receive the reward after all, because such money could be paid only to citizens, and he was outside the pale. So it was offered to the two policemen who made the arrest. Both spurned it.

There was nothing for the court to do but remand Anderson to prison. He did not attempt to deny his identity and went back to Leavenworth to serve out the unexpired portion of his full sentence, all his good conduct commutation having been forfeited by his escape. That was about a week ago.

Kansas City rose up in his behalf, and all Missouri followed the lead of the city. The two policemen who had scorned the blood money accepted it and turned it into the fund that was raised to help obtain Anderson's pardon. Everybody in Kansas City lent a hand. Doctors, lawyers, judges, merchants, the Mothers and Homemakers' Club, the Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce, labor organizations and private individuals, either signed petitions or wrote directly to the President.

The House of Representatives of the State Legislature, by formal resolution, added its weight to the appeal to Mr. Roosevelt. The judge before whom January had been tried wrote one of the strongest letters ever received at the Department of Justice, and the warden of the penitentiary made an appeal. Nothing, he said, could better serve to convince the prisoners now in the penitentiary of the relentless pursuit of wrongdoers by the Government than the manner in which January had been brought back after nine years. But the mere bringing him back had served to enforce that lesson. Now there was opportunity to add to it a lesson equally striking, in the mercy as well as the justice of the Government, by giving the man who had proved his reform a pardon for his old offense.

Neither the White House nor the Department of Justice knew at first what it was all about. By the time the slow-going official mail had brought the information there were thousands of unofficial appeals for mercy for January. Then came a sworn certificate that a petition signed by 37,000 citizens of Kansas City was on its way. Senator Warner and Representative Ellis took up the case. Their constituents in solid mass demanded that they should act.

The red tape of official methods compels a little delay. Usually it is a great deal of delay. But in this case the pardon attorney of the Department of Justice will have his opinion ready promptly after the official application from Mrs. Anderson for her husband's pardon is in his hands. Then it will go to Attorney-General Bonaparte for his recommendation, and thence to the President for action.

PRESIDENT PUTS OUT THIRD TERM FEELER

Reynolds Said to Be Sounding Public Pulse Confidentially.

CIRCULAR LETTER PUT FORTH

Kansas Republicans Hesitate to Believe Roosevelt Out of the Race —Taft Thought to Be in Favor —Copy of Document Sent Out.

Washington, D. C.—It was learned by a visit of James B. Reynolds, of New York, to the White House, that the League of Republican Clubs was feeling the pulse of the people in relation to a third term for President Roosevelt. Reynolds was the President's confidential man in the investigation of the beef packers, and he is engaged yet in special work of a confidential nature for the President. Reynolds had a talk with the President, then hastened to New York.

Reynolds, it is known, spent his time in New York at the headquarters of the League of Republican Clubs. When asked if he was using the League to feel the public pulse in the interests of the President, he answered:

"What a question. It would be out of place in one who is doing special work for the President to answer that question."

It became known, however, that the League of Republican Clubs is sending out circular letters to Republicans in all parts of the country, and as Reynolds is one of the leading officials of the League it is said that the work is being done under his guidance.

This is a copy of the letter:

"My Dear Sir—In view of the present agitation and the sharply drawn issues between the Administration of President Roosevelt and its critics, will you kindly send confidentially to this headquarters your view of the sentiment of the voters of your district, whether for or against President Roosevelt; your opinion as to the developments of the next year, and what course is likely to be taken politically in your district with reference to the election and instruction or non-instruction of delegates to the Republican National Convention of next year?

"It will be a great favor if you will kindly respond at length to this letter. I am, yours respectfully and sincerely. JOHN A. STEWART."

Stewart is president of the New York State League.

"Out in Kansas," said Representative Miller, of that State, "the people are not disposed to make any alignments for the Republican nomination until they feel absolutely certain that the President is out of the race. Somehow they are not willing to accept what he said in his statement on election night in 1904, and believe that he may be induced to again enter the field. This is in spite of the fact that Senator Long, who stands close to the President, recently returned home from Washington and gave an interview saying the President was not in the race and declaring himself for Taft. It will take another utterance from the President before the people of Kansas and elsewhere will relinquish their hesitancy about supporting the candidacy of any other man."

Most of the statesmen and politicians at the White House were not in talkative mood. Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, was one of these. When asked whether he had anything to say connected with Presidential politics, he replied: "I am not involved in these great matters." But the "reactionaries" think he is.

Secretary Taft was another who did not yield to the opportunity to say something of political interest. He said that he wanted a chance to attend to business, and preferred to leave politics alone.

INSURANCE MEN ARRESTED.

George R. Scrugham and Others Charged With Falsifying Ballots.

New York City.—Seeking to have agents of the New York Life Insurance Company jailed on the charge of forging signatures of policy holders in the recent elections of directors, George R. Scrugham, manager for the International Policy Holders' Committee, and two employes were arrested, charged with conspiracy. The warrant was served on Scrugham in the Hotel Hampton, in Albany, by Detective Fitzsimmons, of District Attorney Jerome's office. The prisoner was put on a train leaving that city for this city, where he will be arraigned.

The complaint on which the three were arrested, which had been drawn up by Assistant District Attorney Walter B. Howe, accused Scrugham and his assistants of tampering with defective ballots which had been sent to the Policy Holders' Committee to be cast in support of the committee's ticket. It was charged these ballots were altered so that they could be counted. It is asserted that between 2000 and 3000 envelopes, containing votes, were found, to which the names of policy holders had been affixed by the defendants or at their direction.

Honduran Factions Fight.

Advices from Puerto Cortez told of a fight in Tegucigalpa between Honduran factions, in which seven persons were killed.

"What Shall I Do?"

That is the problem which frequently confronts everyone — especially parents with small children. A slight illness treated at once often saves a long period of sickness and expense—sometimes prevents death. The trouble is that so few people can think on the instant what treatment to apply, even if they have the knowledge necessary to recognize the disease and know what simple remedies are best. To meet this want at small expense the Book Publishing House, 134 Leonard street, New York City, is sending postpaid a doctor book on receipt of sixty cents in stamps. The book is illustrated, contains 598 pages, explains symptoms, causes and simple means of overcoming ordinary illnesses. It was written by the eminent J. Hamilton Ayrea, A. M., M. D. It is a volume which should be in every household, as no one can tell what moment he may require the knowledge it contains.

Australia's State Railroads.

The State railroads of Victoria, Australia, report for the last fiscal year the largest gross earnings on record. These roads have a mileage of 3394 and a capitalization of $201,463,548. Their gross income the last year amounted to $18,432,448 and working expenses to $9,728,246. The fixed charges or interest on the debt were $7,737,438, leaving nearly $1,000,000 as surplus to be turned into the public treasury. This is a new experience for that Australian State. —Springfield Republican.

SKIN CURED IN A WEEK

After Suffering Six Months With Disfiguring Red Spots and Pimples— Cleared Away by Cuticura.

"Cuticura Soap and Ointment are the greatest remedies for skin diseases on earth. I have suffered six months from a disease which I cannot describe, but I will tell you the symptoms. My skin was full of red spots and my face was full of red pimples. It made life miserable for me and I was discouraged with everything. I went to several doctors, but it was useless. I resolved to try the Cuticura Remedies, and after using them for about one week I became a new man. The pimples and the red spots have disappeared and they made my skin as soft as velvet. MINERS SAVED FROM FLOODED COAL SHAFT

Starving Toilers Rescued After Hundred Hours of Agony.

FOUND BY HEROIC COMRADES

Tell Their Experience—Economized on Food in Lunch Baskets and Kept Only One Lamp Burning—In Exhausted Condition.

Johnstown, Pa.—The seven miners who for five days have been imprisoned in the innermost depths of the flooded Berwind-White coal mine at Foustwell were reached by two heroic rescuers at 10 o'clock in the night of the fifth day. All seven were found alive and well, but suffering terribly from thirst and the darkness.

In the morning when the last of the water had been pumped from the mile of flooded tunnel that blocked their way to safety, they were led to the mouth of the shaft.

The names of the two men who reached the entombed seven will go down in the history of mine heroism as the "bravest of the brave." These men are Stiny Rodon and Charles Ream. After one rescue party had given up in despair they swam fifty feet through the pitch-black tortuous tunnel and dragged themselves upon the ledge where the entombed miners sat. The rescuers were more dead than the men to whom they brought the hope of life.

When, two hours after the first heroic swim, Ream, half conscious and exhausted, staggered back to the head of the shaft to bring news of the rescue, such a roar of joy and welcome went up from the anxious crowd in waiting that the ground trembled and the echoes carried for miles.

Earlier in the day a first attempt at reaching the entombed men had been made by a party of four, headed by John Bolya, brother of Foreman Bolya, one of the seven within the mine. But the water was still too high, and though Bolya, frenzied with grief as he thought of his brother's starvation, had desperately dived in an attempt to swim beyond the high water mark, his companions were forced to pull him back by the rope they had tied around his waist as a precaution, and return. At that time the surface of the flood reached the dome of the narrow shaft in many spots along the mile of winding length between the mouth and the little eminence whereon the seven imprisoned men sat waiting.

The return of this party empty-handed drove the thousands outside half wild with grief and disappointment.

Efforts at pumping were then redoubled. At 10 o'clock the water had so far gone down that it was resolved to make one more attempt to break through to the overcast, where it was believed the unfortunate men were still alive.

Rodon and Ream volunteered for the service. They made a dash through fifty feet of water filled heading, reached the starving men.

All seven were not only alive, but well, though greatly exhausted from their long confinement. They were cheerful, too, despite the danger of mental breakdown. In fact, it was to ward off the phantoms threatening them in the unfathomed gloom beyond the small space lighted by their lamp that they kept up their spirits. The rescuers swam under water for many feet to get to them, and when they arrived in the air chamber where the captives waited for help, they for the moment were in worse plight than the men they had braved all to save. For the rescuers were half drowned by their protracted submersion, whereas the other men were singing with forced gayety when the dramatic reunion under ground occurred.

The entombed miners were supplied with abundance of food for days through the forethought of their leader, Michael Bolya, the contractor in charge of the heading swept by the flood. When the water surged around the seven, mounting from knees to hips and reaching for their throats, Bolya shouted to his companions to save their luncheon baskets. Half consciously they obeyed him. They needed no admonition from him to keep their lights dry. That they did automatically, with the instinct of their kind.

The rescued men are: Michael Boyla, John Howard, John Cones, Stephen Ballard, George and John Meka and Michael Petre.

DIED OF REMORSE.

Edward Linne, of St. Louis, Struck His Mother and Committed Suicide.

St. Louis, Mo.—At the inquest into the death of Edward Linne, twenty-four years old, who committed suicide, it developed that Linne took his life because of remorse in having struck his mother. He had been out of work and his mother chided him for not making further effort to secure employment. In a rage he struck her in the face. Later he returned and weepingly begged forgiveness, which she granted. Then he shot himself.

FREED BY "UNWRITTEN LAW"

L. D. Strong, a Macon Merchant, Killed Man Sister Accused.

Tragedy Followed Indictment of a Georgia Printer Said to Have Attacked Woman Employe.

Macon, Ga.—Within three hours after his slaying of Henry D. Smith, a wealthy printer, here, L. D. Strong, manager of one of the largest stores in the city, was released from arrest following a verdict by a coroner's jury of "justifiable homicide." The unwritten law was the justification. The tragedy aroused tremendous excitement throughout the city, chiefly by reason of the prominence of the principals, and the fact that Strong had fired, as he believed, in punishment for the wronging of his sister. When Strong stepped out of the coroner's courtroom a free man he was received with enthusiastic cheers. Smith lived just long enough to deny the accusation against him. He said he knew he was dying, and that he was innocent.

Strong fired five bullets into the body of his victim. The murder was witnessed by a score of Smith's employes. Among them were six women, all of whom fell to the floor fainting. Five minutes before the shooting the Grand Jury had handed up an indictment against Smith charging him with an attack on Miss Lillian Strong, sister of the murderer. The girl herself was the chief witness.

In a short hearing before the coroner's jury it was told that a week ago the young woman went to her brother and made a statement reflecting on Smith. She was employed in Smith's office. The statement inflamed Strong, and he got a revolver with the purpose of immediately killing the printer. His sister restrained him, and finally he promised to take no action further than to carry the case to the Grand Jury.

Strong went to the store where he is employed as usual. But he had resolved to kill, and in his pocket carried a revolver with every chamber loaded. He betrayed no excitement while doing business. He received several salesmen, and from them purchased large quantities of goods of various kinds.

Smith was sitting at his desk in his office on the first floor of his printing plant when Strong entered. He heard the footstep behind him, and turning and looking at Strong, he realized his purpose.

"You've come to kill me?" he said. Strong stood silent, watching, with his hand grasping the pistol in his pocket. "I'm innocent," continued Smith. "Before God, I'm innocent, and I'm helpless before you, Strong."

"You're not innocent," replied Strong with an oath, and, drawing the pistol, fired the five shots in quick succession. Two of the bullets pierced the man's heart and he fell. Men in the office stood as if transfixed until Strong started to walk toward the street; then two of them hurried and caught the slayer by the arms.

"Don't get violent," said Strong. "I'm not going to run away. Call a policeman."

A large crowd followed Strong to the police station and cheered all the way. The coroner decided to hold an inquest without delay, and he swore in the jury just two hours after the shooting. The formal proceedings and the taking of testimony took about fifty minutes, and in ten minutes the jury announced its verdict. One juryman said that the verdict was reached on the first ballot, but that there was a delay by mutual agreement in returning to the courtroom. Just as Strong was released he was informed of the indictment having been found against Smith.

SAID THE GOVERNOR OF N. C.

To the Governor of S. C.: "We're Both Prohibitionists."

New Haven, Conn.—Governor Rollin Woodruff, of Connecticut, returned here from Jamestown, declaring that it is now a longer time than ever between drinks for the Governor of North Carolina and the Governor of South Carolina. Governor Woodruff stood talking with Governor Heyward, of South Carolina, at the Exposition, when Governor Glenn, of North Carolina, came along. Learning that they had never met, Governor Woodruff said:

"Governor Heyward, of South Carolina, let me introduce Governor Glenn, of North Carolina." Then he added, facetiously, "and I expect the usual salutation when the Governor of North Carolina meets the Governor of South Carolina."

Governor Heyward moved restlessly, and responded:

"I beg your pardon, gentlemen, but I'm a teetotaler."

Governor Glenn came to his rescue by saying:

"Don't apologize, Governor, for in that event we're both Prohibitionists. I, too, am opposed to drinking."

SCIENCE ECLIPSED.

A New York Man's Invention Surpasses Expectations.

New York.—On July 3, 1906, letters patent were granted A. O. Leonard on an invisible antiseptic ear-drum, on the megaphone principle, for relief of deafness, head noises, &c., which is proving far more successful than the inventor ever anticipated. Mr. Leonard was deaf for thirty-five years and invented this drum for his own benefit. Ear specialists, family physicians and scientists are amazed at the results, and a very prominent ear specialist says it will make more deaf people hear than all other devices for aiding hearing combined.

Mr. Leonard is sending as promptly as possible full information by mail to those who write him at his office, 1161 Broadway, Suite 230, to try the drums.

Caught Napping.

"It pays sometimes to have the right kind of a lawyer," remarked W. T. Purdy, a well known mining man of the Northwest, at the Palace Hotel. "I was a witness in a case a few weeks ago in Seattle in which a colored man was seeking damages for permanent injuries sustained in an accident to an elevator which he was running. The plaintiff claimed that he had been maimed for life by being permanently deprived of the free use of his right arm. Although the accident had happened months before, his arm was still crippled, and he was unable to raise it above his waist. He explained all this with much feeling and earnestness during his direct examination. Then the attorney for the owner of the building took him in hand.

"'Show us how high you can raise your arm,' said the attorney.

"And the defendant feebly raised his arm a few inches.

"'Now show us how high you could raise your arm before you were injured,' pursued the attorney.

"And the defendant unhesitatingly and unthinkingly raised the crippled arm high above his head, thus knocking his damage claim skyward with one eloquent gesture."—San Francisco Chronicle.

FRIENDS HELP

St. Paul Park Incident.

"After drinking coffee for breakfast I always felt lanquid and dull, having no ambition to get to my morning duties. Then in about an hour or so a weak, nervous derangement of the heart and stomach would come over me with such force I would frequently have to lie down.

"At other times I had severe headaches; stomach finally became affected and digestion so impaired that I had serious chronic dyspepsia and constipation. A lady, for many years State President of the W. C. T. U., told me she had been greatly benefited by quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee; she was troubled for years with asthma. She said it was no cross to quit coffee when she found she could have as delicious an article as Postum.

"Another lady, who had been troubled with chronic dyspepsia for years, found immediate relief on ceasing coffee and beginning Postum twice a day. She was wholly cured. Still another friend told me that Postum Food Coffee was a Godsend to her, her heart trouble having been relieved after leaving off coffee and taking on Postum.

"So many such cases came to my notice that I concluded coffee was the cause of my trouble and I quit and took up Postum. I am more than pleased to say that my days of trouble have disappeared. I am well and happy." "There's a Reason." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

MISS ADELAIDE NICHOLS

PERIODS OF PAIN

While no woman is entirely free from periodic suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. Irregularities and pain are positive evidence that something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to serious derangement of the feminine organism.

Thousands of women, have found relief from all periodic suffering by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, as it is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science.

It cures the condition which causes so much discomfort and robs that period of its terrors. Women who are troubled with painful or irregular functions should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health and strength by taking

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Miss Adelaide Nichols of 324 West 22nd Street, New York City, writes:—Dear Mrs, Pinkham:—"If women who suffer would only rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound their troubles would be quickly alleviated. I feel greatly indebted for the relief and health which has been brought to me by your inestimable remedy."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints such as Falling and Displacements, and Organic Diseases. Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and invigorates the whole feminine system. For the derangements of the Kidneys of either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent.

Republican Convention.

Headquarters Republican State Committee, 1417 Locust St., Phila., Pa.

To the Republican electors of Pennsylvania.

I am directed by the Republican State Committee to announce that the Republicans of Pennsylvania, by their duly chosen representatives, will, in accordance with the provisions contained in Section 12 of the Uniform Primary Law (requiring that the State Convention be held not later than one week after the date of the primaries), meet in convention at the Lyceum Theatre in the city of Harrisburg on Thursday, June 6, 1907, at 10:30 a. m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the following office, viz:

One person for the office of State Treasurer, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented.

In accordance with the rules governing the party, the representation in the State Convention will be based upon the vote polled at the last presidential election. Under the rules, each legistative district is entitled to one delegate for each two thousand voters cast for Republican presidential electors in 1904, and an additional delegate for every fraction of two thousand votes polled in excess of one thousand.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning May 12.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Lessons from the patriarchs. IV. Joseph.—Ps. cv, 16-24.

Joseph was the eleventh son of Jacob and the firstborn son of his beloved wife Rachel. He was born in Mesopotamia about 1746 B. C. He is first mentioned in sacred history when as a youth seventeen years of age he brought evil reports of his brothers to Jacob, their father, and thus aroused their enmity. This enmity was increased by the fact that he was the favorite son of his father and that this partiality had been shown by giving to Joseph a "coat of many colors," "a long tunic with sleeves, worn by youths and maidens of the richer class." Joseph's dreams, in which his future power over his brethren was foreshadowed, added new fervor to their hatred. Being sent on an errand to them by their father when they were in the fields, they determined to kill him, but instead they sold him to a band of Ishmaelites going to Egypt. Here he was sold to Potiphar and soon rose in power; but, being falsely accused by Potiphar's wife, he was thrown into prison, where he remained for at least two years and then was released and placed in high position for interpreting a dream of Pharaoh foretelling seven years of plenty and seven years of famine. Joseph was given entire charge of preparation against the famine and proved a great success. He saved Egypt and even his own family. Through the famine all his brethren and finally his father came to Egypt. Jacob died in Egypt, but at his own request was sent back to Canaan for burial. Joseph lived 110 years, spending ninety in Egypt. But his body was also embalmed and carried back by Moses to Canaan and buried at Scheekem. Joseph's life is thus seen to have been a most romantic one, and from it lessons of value come, especially to the young.

1. Joseph's life teaches a lesson on the dangers of parental partiality. Some children are undoubtedly more lovable than others, and parents may be excusable for even preferring one to another. Joseph was Rachel's firstborn son, and it was natural perhaps that for this reason Jacob should take him especially to his heart; but, whether we may excuse a partial feeling or not, we cannot excuse the manifestation of partiality. No parent should show a marked preference for one child over another. Just as nearly as possible each one should be treated alike to avoid any feeling of enmity or hatred among the children or a resentment toward parents.

2. Joseph's life
God, trials m
umphs. The trial of being sold into a strange country resulted in the triumph of attaining a position of power in that land. The trial of being basely and falsely accused ended in the triumph not only of high position, second only to the king himself, but also in the opportunity of being of great service to humanity. Better than being in high position was the opportunity of saving thousands from starving to death, even his own father and brethren. And why did God thus overrule evil for good in Joseph's life? Because Joseph took God with him into the strange land and was ever faithful to Him. Too many leave God behind when they go far away from home. Such a course cannot bring God's blessing and success.

3. Joseph had no resentment against his enemies. His treatment of his brethren was most magnanimous. In this he typified Christ himself. "Though reviled, he reviled not back again." Human nature usually seeks vengeance upon enemies. "I'll pay you back!" is a very familiar expression, but God has said, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay." Like Joseph and the Master, let us leave all vengeance and punishment to God and strive to live with no feelings of hatred even against our enemies.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

May 12: "Accounting For Our Time." (Epworth League Anniversary Day.) "Let your loins be girded about and your lamps burning."

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—John ix, 4; Gal. vi, 5-10; Col. iv, 5; II Pet. iii, 10, 11.

It is well that we should observe anniversary days and review all the way in which we have come. It is wise to rejoice in the growth and prosperity which have been given us in these years since our beginning in that little church in Cleveland. It has been a path marked by great mercies and rich providences in which God has directed our footsteps.

If we do not do it in a spirit of boastfulness, it is also well to mark the growth of our numbers and take a world survey of the membership of our league fellowship. It gives us a new sight of our obligations, of our bonds of kinship, our opportunities for usefulness and our prospects and needs.

By all means make this anniversary mean as much as possible to the local chapter. Look over the ground you are now trying to cultivate and note the condition of each department of work. If either one is lacking in energy or deficient in wise planning, give immediate attention to the lack and bring up the work to the proper level, remembering that the weakest part must bear the strain and no chain is stronger than its weakest link. Do not try to do the easiest thing at hand. This will lead some chapters to run only the social work and others to have nothing but the spiritual department and still others to hold nothing but meetings for literary culture. Those who do only one of these will be likely to despise those who do anything else. All of them are at fault. All departments are needed in every place, and in all except the most unusual circumstances the whole work can be better carried forward than merely a part.

Do the very best work possible. It will require time, patience, devotion and indomitable perseverance. It will drag at times in spite of all your efforts. Keep at it. If you cannot get through one way, try another. If you cannot get over or through a difficulty, try going around. In some way get there. If you find no way, either make a new one or trust God until He opens one.

We are to keep the lamps lighted—not a few, but all of them.

In some places those who did the league work ten years ago are the ones who carry it now. They are not as young as they used to be. Of course they know a great many things and can do much in better fashion than the younger folks can, but nevertheless it is almost time that some of the younger ones were worked in and shown how to do some things and the responsibility put upon them. In some places there are none of the older ones in the league, and this is a bad state of affairs. Whatever your condition and wherever you are, look over the whole field, see what you are and what you are doing and then study the conditions closely and find how you can improve matters. When you see clearly where the advance can be made, then talk it up and get at work and accomplish the desirable task.

We have no business to do less than our very best. Search out the retiring ones who need to be brought out and developed. Cultivate the things lacking. It is a serious mistake to neglect any line because it is not liked so much as another. Do not push those who push themselves.

Make some discoveries. There are plenty lying right at your door looking up into your face trying to catch your eye and be found out. Open your eyes and find them. Make the most of all your material and time.

Wonderful Eczema Cured.

"Our little boy had eczema for five years," writes N. A. Adams, Henrietta, Pa. "Two of our home doctors said the case was hopeless his lungs being affected. We then employed other doctors, but no benefit resulted. By chance we read about Electric Bitters; bought a bottle and soon noticed improvement. We continued this medicine until several bottles were used, when our boy was completely cured." Best of all blood medicines and body building health tonics. Guaranteed at Wright & Dell. 50c.

Huston's shoes.

May is the greatest shoe month of the spring and December the 10th, 1906 found us buying our shoes before the general advance in price of most shoes which took place Jan. 1907.

The old adage, "The early bird catches the worm" was never so truly exemplified as in the instance of our buying our shoes early.

It is true we can not sell shoes as cheap as we could two years ago but it is equally true that we can sell lower than the fellow who bought his shoes in March and April.

Every shoe in our store is marked according to to the price paid for it.

If we would mark them according to market value we would add 5 to 10 percent on many of them.

Our stock comprises the low shoe in nearly every size made as well as dress and work shoes in regular styles at all prices.

We want to sell you your next pair of shoes and we feel we deserve to by buying our stock for you before the recent advance.

For your next shoes try us.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SALTILLO.

(Held over from last week.)

Lewis Finley and wife attended the funeral of Mrs. L. Lane at Three Springs Sunday afternoon.

Prof. Wm. Beery, of Juniata College, Field Worker of the State Sunday School Association for Huntingdon County was greeted with a large appreciative audiance in the Baptist Church last Friday evening, 26th inst.

Prof. Beery is an earnest, interesting speaker. His message clear and plain for aggressiveness in the different departments of Sunday School work was timely and will be productive of more zeal in winning and training the children for Christ.

A happy event occured April 20th at the residencs of Miss Eleanor Drake, Saltillo Pa. in the celebratiou of her birthday anniversary, and that of her sister Mrs. Albert Sollers, and a nephew, Raymont Drake. There were forty-three relatives and friends present to honor the surprise party. A bountiful dinner was served, the table ladened with an endless variety of good things supplemented with several kinds of cake and Westbrooks elegant ice cream. Miss Eleanor received a number of nice gifts. She has been faithful to her aged mother who has been an invalid for several years. Before the guests dispersed, a service of sacred songs was employed, closing with a season of prayer, and "God Be With You Till We Meet Again", and the Doxology. May many additional "mile-stones" crown the lives of these friends, with our Heavenly Fathers's peaceful blessings.

CASSVILLE.

Mrs. Elbey Green of Pittsburg is visiting friends in Cassville.

Prof. I. W. J. McClain spent Saturday and Sunday at his home.

Mr. Louis Stever of Lancaster has returned to his work after a weeks vacation.

Mrs. Austin Green daughter Anna are visiting relatives in Bellwood.

Dr. Flemig a dentist in Saltillo made a business trip to Cassville last week.

Miss Sue Spangler has returned home after a two weeks visit at the home of her sister in Mapleton.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Green of Johnstown called on friends in town recently.

The eldest son of Philip Park of Johnstown was buried in the Cassville cemetery Monday, we extend our sympathy to the bereaved friends.

Rev. Reeser conducted preaching and comunion services in the M. E. Church Sunday evening.

Cassville was shocked to hear of the sudden death of Mrs. A. J. Henderson Sunday morning Mrs. Henderson was for many years a faithful member of the M. E. Church and her death makes a void which cannot be easily filled.

Rev. Fleck held service on Sabbath morning and eveniug.

Rev. Resser held service on Sabbath evening followed by Communion.

Harman McClain and Chalmer Houck two of our young men who are students at Millersville are both down with measles.

Miss Carrie Smith was at home over Sunday and is well pleased with the instructors at Juniata College.

Wesley Green who was formerly a student at the "The Seminary" here in palmy days was a guest at Austin Greens last week.

Thomas Crum is spending a few days with his parents in Little Valley.

MILL CREEK.

The Saunterer.

The "Home village" is no excention to the rule and have folks and our own folks at that, who never miss a chance to predict that our village cannot reach a more advanced state of progress, but if these good friends would take time to count noses, if the expression is permissible, they would see that our little town shows every indication of a decided awakening from its long years of inactivity, many improvements in the way of more commodious homes and better general conditions along all lines of building, than those of say ten years ago. The new house under construction by Dr. Simpson is a further inovation looking to the artistic in building the home of post master W H. Stonebraker among the last new building put up is an up to date home and the improvements made by many citizens this spring spoken of in previous letters show that the spirit of progress is abroad in our midst, and the future will demonstrate that these same croakers are back numbers.

The saying that a dead duck is of no account, will not fit the case of a number of our folks, as they consulted the wrong law book and made way with a lot of dippers, who was having a time on the river recentyl, to the tune of ten dollars a duck, they come high this season of the year boys.

We notice that Mrs. Johnson Condron, of Altoona, was visiting friends in Bucks-town. Mr. Vance Westbrook, of Philadelphia, is spending some time with his parents Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Westbrook. Mr. W. W. Fuller, of Mt. Union, known as the "Poet of the Juniata Valley" and now among the aspirants to the position of associate judge interviewed the voters of our town during the past week. After the election the lucky one can sing "Where are the other eight?"

YOU THAT ARE GONE.

You that are gone—we know not where,
Save that your eyes were shut in sleep
And that your hands were waxen fair,
Hands whose warm touch we fain would keep—
You that are gone, this is to say
The hearts you left behind you yearn
And wait all patient, day and day,
For your return.

Who knows what pathway lured your feet?
It may be that 'tis yours to fare
Out where the dawn and twilight meet,
Into a vast, unknown, somewhere—
But this is sure, the home hearts wait
While through the mist of worlds you roam,
And sigh and say that soon or late
You will come home.

Your chair within the inglenook
Holds still its comfortable space,
Upon its arm your open book
With ribbon left to mark the place;
Your roses burst anew to bloom
And drip their jewelings of dew;
The very air, lush with perfume,
Is waiting you.

We know not, in the curtained night
Whose every shadow blurs and bars
The far-flung gleaming of the light
That comes from all the time-old stars—
We know not but we faintly hear
Your step, and we hold silence then,
With faith that ever drawing near
You come again.

They say 'tis done; that we no more
May see you smile or hear you speak,
Or catch your footfall on the floor,
Or trace the roses in your cheek;
But still we blindly send this call
To you, that somehow you may learn
That hearts and hearth are waiting—all—
For your return.

JACK

By Belle Moses

Every one agreed that Evelyn Gregory was a queer child. "Of course, it is natural that she should be queer," every one said, "for the poor little mortal to have four parents is rather too much of a good thing."

And so it was, for papa and mamma and grandpa and grandma each owned a share of this "only child," and had wonderful ideas about bringing her up.

"She must be an exception to the ordinary only child," declared the two generations of Gregorys, and they were so afraid of spoiling her by contact with other children not so well behaved that until she was quite a big girl she had no companions of her own age. That she should have been happy under these circumstances, was enough to prove that she was queer, but no one knew with what longing she looked out upon the forbidden, glorious world of romps and games—until Jack came.

How he got there no one ever knew—least of all Evelyn—but after a long and lonesome rainy day, when nurse had tucked her up snugly for the night and the firelight danced merrily all over the floor, Evelyn thought she saw another crib close beside her and the dearest little baby boy sitting up and staring about him with round, sleepy eyes.

"Jack, Jack!" she cried with delight. "I'm so glad you've come to play with me," and, stretching out her arms, she snatched him up and covered him with kisses.

If any one had peeped into the nursery at that minute they would have seen only an excited little girl standing straight up in bed, hugging herself very tight and kissing her own chubby hands. But Evelyn knew better—it was Jack—her darling little brother Jack, and he had come to stay with her always.

She told mamma all about it the next morning in her quaint, solemn fashion, and was quite charmed when mamma gave her permission to play with Jack whenever she liked, so every night Jack's crib grew up beside her own in the nursery and every morning while she was being dressed she dressed Jack very carefully, and all day long she talked and played with him, until Jack—the fanciful creation of a queer child—began to occupy a real place in the household. Evelyn never forgot him under any circumstances; wherever she went, whatever she did, Jack was there, and whenever she walked in the street she always held out her hand as if she were holding Jack's and talked to him as earnestly as if he were really trotting beside her.

What did it matter if other little girls and boys had sisters and brothers. She had a brother—the dearest, sweetest thing, and there were thrilling adventures now to fill up each day.

An only child has to be dressed about three times as often as three children, or even a half dozen children, and when an only child happens to have long golden curls and a very particular nurse those are times of suffering indeed; but Jack's coming made a difference, because, as mamma said, she had to be very good and patient for fear of being a bad example for Jack.

As she grew older and the curls were gathered together in a bright, thick plait, she sorrowfully decided that Jack's hair must be cut. This was an awful day. She took him into the nursery and talked to him very kindly about it, but poor Jack cried and cried and she cried, too, while she snipped them off with her own hands. But by lunch time it was over, and when Evelyn told of the dreadful scene in the nursery she was glad to hear mamma say that short hair was very becoming to Jack and made him look so much more like a real boy.

There came a day at last when it was decided to send Evelyn to school; she was nearly eight years old, and could read and write quite nicely; she had even taught Jack, so that he was not far behind her, and they could both do difficult sums in addition and subtraction.

"I wonder if Miss Murray takes boys," she said, when she and her mother were discussing the new school. "I'd like Jack to go."

"I never thought of asking," said Mrs. Gregory with a smile, "but I think you can risk it; I'm sure he will be very good," and then they both laughed, for Jack's bringing up was quite a joke between them.

Evelyn was very shy at first; she and Jack cowered together in the same seat and gripped hands very tightly under her desk, but her new companions were very nice children and did their best to put her at her ease, so at the end of a week she began to feel quite at home.

It is wonderful how fast this only child fell into the ways of the others, but, sad to relate, poor Jack was very much neglected. When one has a dozen real little girls to play with, it follows quite naturally that a "make-believe" brother is not so necessary as a companion.

After the first few days at school Evelyn decided that it was better to leave him at home, so every morning she settled him comfortably in the nursery, surrounded by all her picture books and toys, gave him a hearty hug and kiss and hurried off without him; but she was very particular about his lessons when she came home, going over and over them with him, until he and she knew them by heart, and when the night came, and they were supposed to be sound asleep she would tell him all the day's doings, chattering away as she had always done.

The strangest part of it all was that she never told her new friends about Jack.

"They wouldn't understand," she said to herself, as she gave Jack an extra remorseful kiss and took him out for a walk.

But things grew worse and worse for poor Jack. The nursery was invaded by these strange little girls, and Evelyn had to shake her head and make signs to him to keep very still, so they would not know he was in the room. She was actually ashamed of Jack, and she sometimes forgot to take him out for days together.

One Sunday morning—a very particular Sunday, for Evelyn was going to church with mamma—she was unusually grave and quiet, not even the knowledge that under her long coat was a dainty new dress and that she would have her favorite ice cream for dinner could bring a smile to her solemn little face.

"Wait a moment, mamma," she said, just as they were ready to start, "I must tie Jack's cravat.

"Oh, we're to have Jack, too?" asked mamma.

"Yes—this time—come on, Jack." And Evelyn held out her hand as she always did when Jack went along.

All through the services she sat with Jack's hand fast in hers, and once or twice she bent down and whispered to him, though mamma shook her head—for Evelyn never could whisper.

Then when they were walking home in the brilliant sunshine mamma noticed that Evelyn no longer held Jack's hand; instead, she held her own snugly in her little ermine muff.

"Why, where's Jack?" she asked, struck by the child's unusual silence.

The blue eyes met hers and filled with ters.

"I—I left him in the church," she said with a sob, "and I'm afraid he'll never be able to find his way home again."

"I'm so sorry," said mamma, and she took one of the little hands out of the muff and held it firmly. "Perhaps he may come by himself."

But Evelyn shook her head, and though she missed him sadly enough at first, and often dreamed about him, and sometimes even cried for him, and wondered what she would ever do without him, Jack never did come back.—Washington Star.

The Best Speaker in Germany.

"The most finished and effective speaker in Germany," said Professor Ernest Schnabel of Berlin, "is Herr Babel, the leader of the Socialist party. This man had no advantage of early training, no university education, and indeed gained his knowledge of literature through his own unaided efforts. He worked at the trade of a wheelwright in his younger days, but even while struggling for a living he was a close student, particularly of governmental affairs and political economy. His views are obnoxious to a great majority of his fellow members of the Reichstag, and yet whenever he rises to speak he commands the closest attention of the legislators. Among his followers he is adolized and they obey him as implicitly as if he were their king. He is a man of austere life and is said to be without even the smaller vices of mankind."—Washington Herald.

STATE NEWS BUDGET.

Brother Back in Forty Years.

Daniel Fisher, member of the Bridgeport School Board and clerk at the Reading Railway freight station, has as his guest his brother Samuel, whom he had not seen in forty years. The brothers at that time were canal boatmen, with headquarters at Port Kennedy, but Samuel went South to seek his fortune rather than pursue the humdrum life of following the towpath. Nothing was heard of him by Daniel until he walked into his home on Depot street, Norristown. Samuel is chief engineer on a large steamboat running from Galveston, Texas. He has had a varied experience since leaving the beautiful Schuylkill Valley, but the most thrilling was his narrow escape from death in the flood of Galveston.

Libel Law Repealed.

The libel law advocated by Governor Pennypacker is dead. Governor Stuart signed the bill repealing the act passed in 1903, which was bitterly fought by the newspapers of the State, but which was put through the Legislature at the instance of party organization. Many of the men who championed the act in the Legislature of 1903 voted for its repeal at the present session. Not a vote was cast against the repealer in either house. One provision of the Pennypacker act, that providing for the publication in each issue of a newspaper of the names of the responsible heads of such publication, will be retained on the statutes, and a bill to that effect is now on its course through the Legislature.

Saves His $200 and His Life.

John Latsha, a wealthy Mahanoy farmer, was held up on Walnut street bridge at Shamokin by three masked highwaymen, who beat him with the butt-end of revolvers until he was senseless and almost dead. Evidently thinking they had murdered him the gang fled. He recovered some time later, and was found by pedestrians, who carried him to a hotel, where a doctor dressed his wounds. At daybreak a wallet containing $200 belonging to Latsha, which had dropped from his pocket during the assault, was found on the bridge, having been overlooked by the thugs.

Boy as Mill Robbers' Tool.

Edward Ashmead, fourteen years old, of Upland, was arraigned before Magistrate Smith charged with being implicated in the systematic robbery of tools, iron and other articles from the Federal Steel Foundry Company's plant. James T. Merritt, superintendent of the plant, stated that the robbery had been so extensive that no estimate on the loss could be given, and that he believed the boy was the tool of a gang of young men whom he had seen with a team at the works in readiness to move the booty. Ashmead was held under $300 bail for his appearance at Juvenile Court.

Profit of 1000 Per Cent.

According to advance reports of the auditors of the Capitol Investigating Commission, at Harrisburg, John H. Sanderson & Co., of Philadelphia, received $117,258.40 for furnishings of the House caucus room of the new Capitol and $88,242.97 for those of the Senate caucus room. The most expensive furnishings were the rostrums, for which Sanderson received $90,748.80, and for which he paid $2060 to the sub-contractor who supplied them. The profits of Sanderson, who supplied all the furnishings in these rooms, are estimated by the auditors at 1000 per cent.

Dies Because Wife Faints.

A pathetic feature of the suicide of William Tyson, a retired farmer, of York, by hanging, brought out at the Coroner's inquest, was the fact that his wife might have saved his life had she not swooned at the terrible spectacle. When she found her husband suspended by the neck he was still gasping, having looped the rope about his neck as he stood on the floor and then thrown his weight upon it until he lost consciousness. While she lay unconscious at his feet Tyson died from strangulation.

Marked Money For Bribes.

In the alleged bribery cases of the Central Board of Education, where it is alleged that those interested in the retention of certain books in the schools of Pittsburg offered as high as $1500 apiece to members of the board for their votes, marked money was used. This, it is said, will be introduced in evidence when the board meets.

Cripple Loses Life in Fire.

The Hotel Campbell, in Athens, was completely destroyed by fire. Elam Kendall, a cripple, was unable to get out and lost his life. The fire started near the stairway and cut off all means of escape, and the guests were forced to jump from windows. Several were injured. The origin of the fire is not known.

RAIN SAVES WHEAT CROP.

It Was Damaged by Drought and the Green Bug.

Lincoln, Neb.—Every report from the wheat raising section of the State is favorable. Bugs have been found, but so far as can be judged by cursory examinations no damage has been done by them. The weather has been cold, as low as freezing in some parts of the State, but as it has remained cloudy no injury has been done by frost. The only bad effect of the cold weather has been to retard or prevent the growing of the plant, but warm weather will bring rapid development. March's mild weather gave the wheat a good boost, but it is nearly two weeks backward at present. Wheat in Nebraska is better than in any other Western State. The oats outlook is bad. The cold weather has been unfavorable to any propagation of the grain, and while it is too early to prophesy its fate, the crop is certain to be smaller than the average. The rains have come in time to save the Kansas wheat crop from any important damage by dry weather. The wheat plant was beginning to pale from a thrifty green to a sickly yellow, and all over the State farmers were becoming anxious over the outlook. The wheat is about normal height, though most of its growth was made late in March and early in April. For three weeks the cold dry weather kept it back.

ROGERS CONFESSES THE OLNEY MURDERS

Tells How He Shot Brothers and Slew Ingerick Child.

HE GOT ONLY SIXTEEN DOLLARS

Admissions Wrung From Him on Railroad Train En Route to Middletown—Killed Three Unaided, Police Quote Man.

Middletown, N. Y. — How little value attached to "deathbed" identifications under certain conditions was made clear by a police report of a confession to three murders and a murderous assault they said had been made to them by Charles Henry Rogers, whom they brought from Los Angeles. Sheriff Decker, Police Chief McCoach and Under Sheriff Hock asserted Rogers admitted that he killed little Alice Ingerick and Willis C. and Frederick R. Olney and tried to slay Mrs. Georgia Ingerick, mother of the girl, on the Olney farm on October 5, 1905. The confession they attributed to Rogers threw ridicule on most of the theories advanced by city or county authorities in the days and weeks following the quadruple crime.

But it did more. It proved how utterly mistaken Mrs. Ingerick was when she "identified" Alanson Graham and "Little Dan" Davis as men possibly connected with the crime. Rogers, the police said, asserted he killed the Olneys and Alice Ingerick without any one's assistance, and his story made it appear he was the man Mrs. Ingerick thought she recognized first as Graham, her former employer, and next as Davis, a man with a petty police record. The erroneous "identifications" by Mrs. Ingerick were explained by persons who recalled that when she made them a year and a half ago she still was suffering from a compound fracture of the skull resulting from blows rained on her by the murderer.

Rogers related, the police said, that, after killing three persons and almost slaying another, he got only $16 as plunder. He lured Willis and Frederick Olney into the woods on their farm, he confessed, by telling them he was a policeman and wished them to help him arrest a man hiding there. In the heart of the woods he shot both the Olneys, killing them. Then he went to the house and told Mrs. Ingerick, housekeeper for the Olneys, that one of her employers had been kicked by a horse. He wanted towels and water for the injured man, he said. Mrs. Ingerick, snatching up an armful of towels and a pail of water, went with Rogers to the stable, where she supposed Olney lay. When she entered the building Rogers felled her with an iron pipe wrapped in newspaper. He thought she was dead, and dragging the body into a stall covered it with hay.

Alice was in the kitchen eating her dinner. Rogers walked into the room and told her the cellar door was open and she would better go down and close it. The little girl started down the cellar stairs, Rogers following closely. When she reached the cellar floor the man struck her with the same iron pipe with which he had felled her mother. He beat out the child's brains. After satisfying himself the little girl was dead Rogers went up stairs and closed all the doors and windows. He searched the house, but did not find any money save $16. In the attic he cut open a trunk and scattered papers.

Fleeing the house, Rogers went to Chicago, whence he worked his way to Los Angeles. He was caught in California by the Pinkertons when the police and other authorities had failed signally after making many arrests, several of which were almost absurd. Three of the police arrests resulted from blind faith in "identifications" made by a woman with a badly fractured skull, Mrs. Ingerick, who did not recover her health until months had passed.

The police took Rogers to the spot on the Olney farm where, they said, he told them he had hidden the papers and wallets of the Olney brothers, but they found nothing. It is understood Rogers will be tried in October next in Goshen.

PLEADED FINANCIAL INSANITY.

Court Acquits Business Man and Refuses to Send Him to Asylum.

Boston, Mass. — "Financial insanity" was the novel plea that brought freedom to Harry E. Lane, formerly a prosperous business man of Wakefield, who has been on trial in the United States Circuit Court on the charge of criminally concealing his assets from his trustee in bankruptcy.

Insanity experts testified that Lane was afflicted with a mania for spending money, and that he had no idea where it went. After a brief deliberation the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. A motion of United States Assistant District Attorney Ham to commit Lane to an asylum was denied by Judge Dodge on the ground that the defendant was not legally insane.

Buying Still Confident.

It is worth noting that despite the bad crop reports from the Southwest buying from that section in the leading markets is still confident.

MARVIN BOY'S BODY FOUND IN A MARSH

The Spot Had Been Burned Over and Searched Over.

DISCOVERY ENDS LONG SEARCH

No Marks on His Body—Detectives Think That He Wandered Into the Marsh and Was Overcome by Cold—Investigation Ordered.

Dover, Del.—In a tract of marshy ground that had been hunted over many times and burned over as well, the body of Horace Marvin, the four-year-old son of Dr. H. N. Marvin, was found. His father is convinced that the child was murdered after having been abducted on March 4. There are no marks on the body to uphold his theory.

The body was discovered by Allie Pleasanton, a farmer's son, who went to the marshes on the Marvin farm to shoot ducks. He had entered the farm from the rear, and had gone only a short distance when he saw an object which resembled a bundle of rags. As he bent over it he found it to be the body of a child. He then hurried to the Marvin house, about half a mile away.

The doctor, accompanied by his elder son, Harvey, hurried to the marshes with their guide and recognized the clothes worn by the boy when he was last seen. The cap was lifted from the face and the father exclaimed:

"It is Horace!"

The body was carried to the farmhouse in a sheet and laid out to await the Coroner. Dr. Marvin at once hurried to Dover to arrange for an autopsy and inquest.

The body when found lay face downward in a patch of meadow grass. There was not a mark indicating foul play. It was in a good state of preservation, indicating that it had been frozen. The face was much swollen. There were some indications that the body had been in water for some time. The clothing was intact. The tiny woolen reefer was buttoned up securely about the body and not an article of clothing was missing. The knit cap was pulled over the face and the mittens were on the hands.

There are some mysterious features of the find. In the first place, the spot in which the body was lying was most thoroughly searched by Dr. Marvin and Superintendent Bearce of the detective agency about three weeks ago. At that time the tall sage grass from the swamp was burned away, and since then many others have repeatedly tramped over the spot without seeing any trace of the body. Only a few days ago Dr. Marvin's son Harvey aided a number of farmhands in placing a fence within a short distance of the place.

Dr. Marvin says he had searched over the same marsh nearly every day since the disappearance. He and detectives stood on or near the spot when they burned the grass from it. Pleasanton says the body was in plain view for more than twenty feet when he came across it.

Detectives who have been on the case are inclined to the belief that the boy wandered into the marshes from the farm, and being overcome by the cold, fell exhausted.

DEAN HUFFCUT KILLS HIMSELF.

Governor Hughes Identifies His Law Adviser's Body.

New York City.—Governor Hughes, coming to this city to review the Seventy-first Regiment, was met at breakfast at the Hotel Astor with the news that his law adviser, Ernest W. Huffcut, dean of the Cornell Law School, had shot himself dead on the Albany night boat Charles W. Morse on his way to this city. Governor Hughes abandoned his breakfast, called an electric hansom, and with Colonel Treadwell, his military secretary, went to the undertaking shop of Stephen Merritt, at Eighth avenue and Nineteenth street, to which the body had been removed. Here the Governor was led back to the embalming room and identified the body.

"Huffcut, you were one of the finest men I ever knew. I don't understand why you did this," the Governor said.

It is believed by Dean Huffcut's friends that he broke down from overwork. They say that he had labored almost incessantly in the drafting of the bills for legislation that the Governor desired.

Dean Huffcut was born at Kent, Conn., November 21, 1860, and entered Arts and Sciences in the class of Cornell University in the School 1884.

DANCE COSTS FOUR LIVES.

Parents Lock Up Children and Their Home Burns Down.

West Branch, Mich.—Four small children were burned to death in the home of Martin Campbell, eight miles from here on a branch of the Michigan Central Railway.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell had gone to a dance a mile away from their home, leaving their six little ones locked in the house. A big fire in the stove in some manner ignited the house, which was destroyed with its contents. The children were awakened by the flames, and the two eldest, aged eight and ten years, escaped in their night clothes.

The Pulpit

Subject: Murder.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Preaching at the Irving Square Presbyterian Church on the above theme, the pastor, Rev. Ira Wemmell Henderson, took as his text: Exodus 20:13, "Thou shalt not kill." He said:

The extent and force of the admonition to recognize the inalienable right of all men to life is not widely recognized in our day, in view of the professed love of our forefathers and us for God and the Christ. With no circumlocution and no wavering of the voice, Moses speaks out for God a principle that the modern world, as the nations of all ages have done, disregards. To be sure the civilization of to-day is better in general than the manner of life thousands of years ago. We do not kill our neighbors out in the open to gain our food. The settlement of private wrongs by "wild justice" is, in this country at least, limited largely to the mountain whites. No man of enlightenment grants the right of a ruler anywhere to stamp out a human life arbitrarily as of old. Physical disability in a babe to-day merits more our sympathy than slaughter. Gradually we are coming to recognize the rights and privileges of the children who are yet unborn. Vendettas are unpopular, and the mere threat to kill is, very properly, sufficient to put a man under bonds to keep the peace. Nowhere is the murderer safe from the clutches of outraged law. Does he slay his victim here, then whither shall he flee? The minions who upholds the law in Mohammedan Turkey will hound him to the earth to return him to the scene of his fortal sin in the borders of Christian America. Here and there a few far-seeing souls declare that even the State has no business to exact an eye for an eye, a life for a life, and they say that society has no more right to cut short a human career than has that unit of society the individual. Yes, the recognition by the world of the wisdom of this commandment is greater to-day than ever before, but it is not yet what it should be.

To kill a man is to deprive him of life. But the process may be varied and the length of time consumed in stifling the light of life may be greater or less, according to the means employed. "Thou shalt not kill," says the commandment, and instinctively we picture the quarrel, the hot fight, the hand quick to slay. "Thou shalt not kill," and we see the gun, the axe, the poison, the bludgeon. "Thou shalt not kill," and the vision of a sharp, keen conflict, man to man, or of the silent, sudden blow flashes into the mind's view. Yes, each photograph is true to some scene in life. To these the law refers! But is this all? Is it always the axe or the poison or the gun that fells a soul into eternity? Must the murderer be the man with the instrument of immediate death? Are the murders which are the result of overt crime the only killings that take place? I think not. Slow work is not so fast, but it is just as sure. The breaking of a human heart by ill-treatment, either in word or act, is murder, though the papers never hear of it. Constant abuse may end a life, though the body show never a scar.

The man who hounds his family to an early grave with physical abuse is a murderer. The smooth and careless youth who breaks his mother's heart is no less guilty than the man who brains me with a maul. The scurrilous and unscrupulous writers who hold honest men up to obliquy and shatter sensitive souls till the hand of death draws them out into the other life, are guilty of a mortal crime. The man who grinds the men who labor till they welcome death with joy is soiled with blood. The company of respectable and money-eyed men who use their reputable names to float financial schemes and then ruin those who, trusting them, have put their all into their keeping, are guilty of robbery least of all. The record of the starved, the broken-hearted, the insane, the suicides, is but the corollary of their greed. The man who sells his neighbor poison, be that poison arsenic or whisky, is accessory before the fact to a suicide. The employment of children in factory and mining work before their time is almost murder in the first degree.

My friends, anything that tends to destroy or prematurely to curtail human life is a means to murder, and the men who set into motion the forces of unrighteousness that deal and hasten death are criminals in the sight of God, though the law may never touch them. Far be it from me to say that many of the men who commit these indirect murders have any real intention to cause misery or to commit crime. But the truth is that they are none the less culpable. The one thing that is needed is a clear-cut vision of the meaning of the commandment which frames our text. The need is for sharp and unmistakeable definition of what it is to kill. The eyes of men must be opened to their personal responsibility for the outcome of their acts. A new realization of the fullness of the command of Christ must infill every human heart. Moral laziness must give the way to moral clarity of vision. Spiritual indifference must yield the road to spiritual insight. The Christ must come into all men's hearts not in small measure but with a fullness that shall leave no room for unrighteousness. We must train our minds to thoughtfulness for others, and not to satisfaction of self. The money in our purses ought to burn our very souls if we see upon it any tinge of blood. The health and happiness of the man who toils, and bends a weary back that we may live in luxury, must be our care. The amelioration and betterment of the life of all the world should be our constant aim. As Christian individuals we should guard the life of every human soul.

As the right of the individual to slay his brother is denied by the commandment, so also implicitly the right of society to take human life is questioned. The murderer is an enemy to society, and for the best welfare of the many it is wisest to keep him under guard. But the principle of the lex talionis, the life exacted for the life destroyed, is un-Christian, and in the light of the teachings of Jesus is unwarranted. The State lowers itself and commits real sin when it wreaks the penalty of death upon the modern Cain. Vengeance is the business of the Lord, if indeed there be any such thing. The State has nothing to gain by the sending of any soul to his last rest. The criminal has the right to a death not of the State's making. The principle of capital punishment is as vicious at bottom as is private murder by the individual, and is unwholesome in that it disregards the very law of inalienable right to life that it essays to protect. "Thou shalt not kill," says the State, "for if you do, and we can prove the case against you, we will slay you." The inconsistency of the situation should appeal to everyone, but queerly enough the very disciples of that Christ who said, "Father, forgive," are among the loudest clamorers for the life of the murderer.

But the greatest example of the violation of this commandment is to be found in the actions of the Christian nations of to-day. Theoretically Christian, we are, as segregated peoples, largely pagan. Praising God as individuals and despising, most of us, in our private lives un-Christian conduct and un-Christlike acts, we stand ready as members of a great social body to sustain and to serve measures that are wholly corrupt and corrupting. Professing a love for peacefulness and for the Prince of Peace, we pay without a grumble our military tithes. Indeed, we may often see the spectacle of two mighty peoples, each paying homage to the same God, clutching each at the other's throat, the meanwhile each is asking God to give the enemy defeat. All too often we may see the armies and the navies of a wealthy Christian nation full of power, menacing a weaker sister to collect a money debt. The nations of this day descend to the decision by fisticuffs which all worthy men deny to be manly, or to be of value to decide an issue.

The situation would be ludicrous were it not so lamentable.

Christian men and Christian nations have no communion with disloyalty to the Father. The individual, the church, the peoples have no call to kill. God gave us brains with which to settle our difficulties in sober thoughtfulness. He gave us our hands to help ourselves, not to harm each other. The more money you may possess, the more must you care for the men below and about you. Financiering that makes its chief profits through the exploitation of the man with small means, or through the financial wrecking of the moneyed man, has no place in a Christian economy, for its fruit is all too often death. Many are the victims of unscrupulous Napoleons of finance. The easier you make the task of the toiler in your shop, or mine, or mill, or field, the more do you serve your God. The oftener we settle disputes between individuals or among nations, by the courts of arbitration, the more do we glorify our Lord and manifest our manhood. Immense armaments merely prove national weakness of will and lack of mental poise. Wars often bring victory to those who are in the right, and they should. But no war has ever proven the validity of the case of any victor no matter how well founded the argument of that winning party may have been.

The crushing of little children at men's tasks is a short-sighted policy to score it very little. The system which wrecks and destroys the youth of a land, prepares a heritage of wrecked humanity for the worriment of future generations. Gain at any price is a poor business proposition, and is morally unjustifiable.

My friends, the need of the hour in this matter is for an honest recognition, by individuals and nations, of the force which the words of Jesus Christ add to the command "thou shalt not kill." We need a quickened conscience that shall always counsel for the right. We need a holy manhood that shall insist that no form of murder, be it brutal or refined, shall soil the private or the public record. The call is for Christ men who dare to do good and to be upright, no matter how much the dividends may suffer, no matter how much humanity may remain unappreciative of kindness, charity and love. The call is for men of high and men of low estate who shall ever recognize that war is hell, and that God is honored, not by the smoke and din of battle, but by the exercise of human self-control.

Let us, then, be men, and be sure to keep our hands from blood-guiltiness. Let not the death of our brothers be upon us. Let us live and let live. Let us serve and save. Let us not destroy.

Paying For Sin.

Every sin must be paid for; every sensual indulgence is a harvest, the price of which is so much ruin for the soul.—Robertson.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR MAY 12 BY THE REV. I. W. HENDERSON.

Subject: Joseph Forgives His Brothers, Gen. 45:1-15, 50:15-21—Golden Text, Eph. 4:32—Memory Verses, 4, 5.

In all the range of literature there is no single story, save that which relates the incomparable deeds of our Lord and Saviour, which surpasses the story of the life and the deeds of Joseph. It has its peers, perhaps. It has no superiors. It is so very human, so entirely probable, so realistic that it compels attention and stimulates our thought.

This is the fourth and the last lesson upon the life of Joseph. We find him a dreamer in the first lesson, boyishly egotistical, perhaps, before his brethren. We leave him a man of maturity, of noble qualities, a man of delightful magnanimity, of abiding affection, of forgiveness.

The magnanimity of Joseph throughout his life is an inspiration. It is never more inspiring than in those days when in the midst of dire famine and distress his brethren come to him for aid and succor. He might have been vindictive. He might have wreaked vengeance upon them in retribution for the unholy manner and unbrotherly fashion in which they had treated him in the days when they were at home together. He might have killed them all and none would have been the wiser save God that he was a fratricide. But Joseph did none of these things. The sight of his brethren evidently aroused the finest instincts of his nature. All the godliness of his character shines forth as he remembers not so much that they had sold him into slavery as that they are his brethren. To be sure we notice that the more human side of his make-up also has rein in this situation. He cannot refrain from testing his brethren in purely human fashion before he lets them into the secret of his identity. But in all his dealings we find that the hardness is only apparent, the sternness is only superficial. In his heart of hearts Joseph is inclined to be lenient. He has no desire utterly to humiliate his brethren. His great-heartedness is akin to the magnanimity of Jehovah.

Another characteristic that the lesson pointedly sets forth is the abiding affection of Joseph for the friends of his youth, for even the unworthiest of his own brethren, for Benjamin, child of the same beloved mother as himself, for Jacob his father. Busy man and ruler of a nation that he was Joseph never forgot the days of his youth, those who were near and dear to him by the ties of relationship. The cry of distress of the brethren who had so cruelly sent him, as they thought, to death, fell upon a responsive ear. He did not shut up his heart against them. Love for his own kin declares itself markedly in his treatment of his brethren. His heart yearns toward Jacob and Benjamin. And the closer the tie of relationship the warmer the affection. His first call is for the father who had so delighted in him. The second is for the brother whose soul was knit to his own by the blood and the spirit of the common mother. This shows forth in his conversation and his gifts. For every portion that he gives to the unworthy brethren he gives Benjamin five. Possessing the renewed companionship of his humbled brethren he rests not until he has Benjamin and Jacob near his side. His affection is abiding.

A third commendable characteristic of his dealing with his brethren is his forgiveness. It marks him as indeed a man of God. Many men in his position would have been proud, haughty, unyielding, unrelenting. Many men would have evened things up. Many would have utilized the opportunity to wipe off old scores. The baser nature of many a man would have dominated at such a crisis. The temptation for many would have been to take as a motto not "To err is human, to forgive divine," but, "He who laughs last laughs best." But Joseph was a man of God. He saw in the denouement the unravelling of the mystery of the vision God had given him in his youth; he saw the fulfillment of his dreams. This was not a situation wrought by man, it was the handiwork of God. Before the leadings of Jehovah jealousy, rancor, spleen, vindictiveness were discounted and discountenanced. This was the opportunity of a great man to test and reveal his greatness. And Joseph acted after the similitude of God. The prayer for forgiveness presented by his brethren was heard and affirmatively answered.

These qualities that the lesson discovers to us in the life of Joseph are qualities that we ought to have individually. The lesson will be of no value whatsoever unless it impresses each of us for himself. It will be useless unless we feel the impact of the application in our own lives. Magnanimity is one of the things that many otherwise good people lack. They are good at heart, but they are not great-hearted. No man can be magnanimous and be small. Likewise no man can be magnanimous who does not consider life in the light of eternity and without having his horizon broadened, his interests enlarged, his vision deepened. So is it with abiding affection. It is no credit to a man that he easily forgets the old associations, the earlier companionships of his life. But best of all is the capacity to forgive. That is divine. Godliness will manifest itself in a forgiving spirit.
